1. Canitz (E-81): Until 1947, this airfield was not in use. In March 1948, the partially-destroyed fuel tanks were repaired and refilled with 1,500 hectoliters of gasoline. On 1 May 1948, the construction of a cement runway was begun. No Soviet Air Force units were based on the field as of June, but single planes used the facilities from time to time.
2. Grüdel (E-91): The airfield here is also known as the "Leutewitz" field. Intensive construction work was being carried out during June 1948 by a crew of 172 German workers under Russian direction. An ammunition depot is located on the field; and, toward the beginning of May 1948, between 600 and 800 aerial bombs, weighing approximately 500 kg. each, were delivered from the Riesa railway station. Six twin-motored bombers took on loads of bombs on 10 May. Twelve German Stuka dive-bombers were stationed at the Grüdel airfield during June 1948.
3. Dresden-Klotzsche (E-29): Two turbo-jet fighters were reported to be stationed at the airfield here during June 1948. They were said to be of the flying wing type, without a tail assembly, and powered by two turbine engines.
4. Grüditz (E-92): According to an unconfirmed report, a large number of twin-motored planes was based on this airfield between 10 and 16 June 1948.
5. Alt Lönnewitz (E-84): A unit of jet planes was based on this field during June 1948.
6. Grossenhain (A-01) and Königsbrück (A-31): A squadron of heavy bombers is distributed between these two airfields. Two other squadrons are stationed in the vicinity of Berlin.
7. Dresden: Soviet Army units in Dresden carried the following APO numbers during June 1948: 720423, 720392, and 737713. Komendatory were established at the following addresses:

City District (Stadtteil) 1: a. Kronenstrasse, corner of Woldemannstrasse

b. Dippelsd. Strasse, corner of Buchenholzstrasse

City District 2 : a. Nordallee (Grenadier-Kaserne)—central komendatura for Dresden-Neustadt
